1. Introduction of author by Dean of the College Jill Dolan
0:00 – 0:50 (50")
2. Discussion between President Chris Eisgruber '83 and author Jennifer Morton: Author's approach to the research and the book. Who is my audience, and what will they respond to?
1:00 – 3:45 (2'45")
3. Eisgruber and Morton: How can we use Ivy League resources to impact strivers beyond our own campuses?
3:46 – 7:16 (3'30")
4. Student Q&A: Are contingent consequences affected by level of prestige of college?
3:47 – 10:48 (7'01")
5. Student Q&A: How to navigate conversations explaining yourself to others, as a first gen student, or student of color, while maintaining your mental health?
10:49 – 13:33 (2'44")
6. Student Q&A: Lessons for Princetonians from students at CUNY?
13:34 – 18:16 (4'42")
7. Student Q&A: Philosophical vs ethnographic approaches
18:17 – 21:26 (3'09")
8. Student Q&A: How can you successfully engage in "clear-eyed code switching" without sacrificing ethical values? (with Eisgruber followup.)
21:27 – 28:42 (7'15")

9. Student Q&A: How specifically to move forward without losing your traditions – when you tell your mom that everything is fine when it isn't?

28:43 – 34:12 (5'29")

10. Conclusion by Eisgruber: Language of ethics helps us organize our experiences and understand our problems – but doesn't give us solutions.

34:14 – 35:14 (1'00")

11. Conclusion by Morton: Don't lose sight of what you want to keep in your life. Make your Princeton experience something that enriches your values. The book tries to help you articulate that.

35:16 – 36:30 (1'14")
